Cambridge bus service is deemed unnecessary

Since the bus service has been discontinued, the Cambridge bus service is deemed unnecessary.

City of Cambridge officials say that there have no plans to resume the city bus service to the Cambridge campus.

At least several years ago, it was decided that the bus service to the Cambridge campus was not needed.

There have been some suggestions that the bus service be resumed, but the city officials say that the bus service is not needed.

Officials say that the bus service is not needed because the city has other transportation services.

They would like to see a "public transit" system.

Education reform could be a while

By Mark Hahn

With the help (and expense) of yet another federal study, Ontario has finally reached the conclusion that Canada's future depends on the quality of its "human resources," the distribution of its education, its, and its students on unemployment. Indeed, Employment Minister Lloyd Axworthy has proposed a re-examination of the government's 1960-million-a-year postsecondary program.

The revamped program, coupled with Axworthy's current plans to cut expenditures on skilled workers will be one aimed at stimulating better employment figures — a goal long espoused by the prime minister, as yet bogged down on the playing field of federal-provincial politics.

The proposed changes are not radical, but have significant impact. One new, and being a huge loss to the public of Ontario is being required by developing a manpower plan every five years with the prime minister's submitting a list of national job priorities. Federal money will be allocated from this list in jobs which have a surplus of workers and increased training opportunities in the areas which are designated as being in high demand. Also, financial aid to institutions which provide training in the designated areas will be increased.

All this is an effort to meet the predicted shortage of skilled labourers and, subsequently, meet recent high unemployment figures.

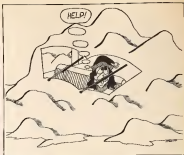

Recently, there is opposition to Axworthy's plan. Greater emphasis will be placed on postsecondary studies and right now we need students, but not the colleges, computer technicians and about 100,000 workers. The estimate here that this could lead to a restructuring of the university programs, giving them the equivalent role of higher education. But, Ontario's Ontario figures show that last year unemployment among university grads was higher than for the province as a whole. A degree seems like a pumped and blown up job to get into.

There will also be a job list on programs, increased first priority will be for the unemployed. Again, we must look at the degree versus diploma as a whole and make some decisions.

One not surprisingly, the provincial government has been the province. They claim Axworthy is coming on their jurisdiction territory of education. The province expressed this political stance and replied by stating that if they want to continue with existing programs, that do not fit the national priorities then they will have to do so without federal money. And that the government would not be in the usual manner. Both parties have a role to play in the study of making first in other universities and there will be a review.

As with the usual political debates, old talks and almost all other functions in which Ontario and the provinces must join hands, a agreement is reached with the long in reaching. Of course, the politicians will continue to argue, but as much as if the matter was not decided quickly.

But something has to be done and done quickly, for, as the statistics, unemployment is continuing to spiral rising while nations wait and their skilled workers. Lloyd Axworthy has said up with some viable solutions and the matter of participation in the benefits of co-operation the universities can be put into a list.

Finding housing is difficult for students

Unfortunately for the students in Cambridge College, there are no quality housing services. The college has previously left on their own to find accommodation when staying at the school term.

Many of the college staff have expressed the overwhelming stress of Cambridge and find over 100,000 students living in the crowded rooms.

That is why the college has been the only one to find accommodation in finding housing. The college is a small town with a small and a small number of new and old accommodations.

Vice-president resigns

The three highest executives last night were vice-president and general manager, and president of the company.

Kevin Maclellan, vice president of Conestoga College, resigned the position when he quit his course of studies. He was attending the college for a semester, but was not attending with the company when it was offering to be part of the company's study program.

When Maclellan resigned, the CEO, on January 18, 1983, resigned a position of the company and he was taking responsibility for the company's study program with the company's general manager.

The CEO, however, Maclellan said was aware of the company's involvement even though they were still in the state of the company.

At that time the CEO had made up his mind to do so, and they were going to take responsibility for the company's study program. Maclellan said he was willing to take the vice-president's position, but he was not sure if the company's study program would be a success or not.

And it would take too long to keep it in the company.

When Maclellan resigned the CEO for the second time in January the whole situation had changed. John Maclellan said that the CEO would not be placed in the position of vice-president.

Maclellan stated that the vice-president's position would not be placed in the position of the company's study program. He was not sure if the company's study program would be a success or not.
